RADISHES: A NEW COVER CROP OPTION

STORY AND PHOTOS BY MARSHA HEWITT

A new cover crop is making an appearance across South Carolina. Daikon radishes are taking root as farmers seek to improve their soil quality and reduce farm costs.

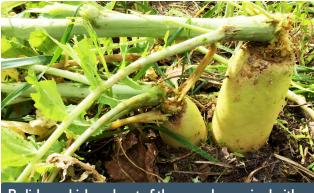

According to the American Society of Agronomy, the daikon or Japanese radish has a very large tap root that can penetrate layers of compacted soil better than most other cover crops. The thick, fleshy upper part of the taproot grows 12 to 20 inches long, which creates vertical holes that break up soil compaction and improve soil tilth.

The radishes are excellent at breaking up compacted soils, earning them the nickname "bio-drills" or "tillage radishes." Early planted radishes can produce a dense canopy that all but eliminates weed emergence in the fall and winter. They also soak up nutrients and release them the following spring.

areas like Dillon, Dorchester, Clarendon, Lee and Orangeburg are experimenting with radishes.

One of the great features of radish cover crops is that they can be used as a biological tool to reduce the effects of soil compaction, hence the term "tillage radish"... After the cover crop dies and its roots decompose, the remaining channels are used by the growing roots of following crops to penetrate compacted deep soil layers. — American Society of Agronomy

Radishes, which push out of the ground, are mixed with rye grass, clover, and winter peas.

Clemson Extension agent David Dewitt, who works in the Pee Dee area, explained that there is a national trend to try to keep the ground alive. Cover crops can substitute for expensive deep ripping. Tillage radishes in particular help with compaction. Farmers used to disc their fields several times during winter, but cover crops are a healthier option for the soil, Dewitt said.

Rye and oats are traditional cover crops, but farmers in a few Gordon Mikell, agronomist with USDA/Natural Resources Conservation Service, said there's been a push for cover crops in the last five or six years. "The end goal is for farmers to get weed suppression and nutrient cycling, which will reduce his costs."

Although only about 10 percent of farmers are using the tillage radish as a cover crop, its use is continuing to grow. "The adoption rate is generally high once they try it," Mikell said. "This has been a farmer-led movement. They are looking for ways to reduce input cost. It's also an opportunity to rejuvenate the land and build the soil."

Ricky Atkinson of Lee County is in his second year with tillage radishes. Atkinson Farms uses a mixture of rye grass, clover, winter peas, and radishes.

"The ground would dry out quicker with nothing planted. Keeping something growing year round helps with soil structure," he said, adding that cover crops make the landscape look better and provide winter habitat for quail and rabbits. Tillage radishes not only help with soil compaction, but the mass gives a layer of insulation that keeps the soil temperature cooler and retains moisture.

Farmers can contact their local NRCS office for cost share information.

COMMISSIONER'S CORNER

HUGH E. WEATHERS SOUTH CAROLINA COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE

FROM LOCAL TO GLOBAL

he National Association of State Departments
of Agriculture, NASDA,
hosted its annual Winter Policy Conference in Washington, DC recently.
While at the meeting I visited with members of our South Carolina delegation, including Congressman Jim Clyburn.

During the many sessions with various commissioners, secretaries, state and USDA staff, and other industry professionals, I began to reflect on various global topics and issues and how they relate to our state. I see the potential for topics like surface water, tariffs, innovation and new trade markets to positively affect our farmers here.

Waters of the United States, or what we shorten to WOTUS, is what the EPA has proposed as new definitions of water to replace the pre-2015 rules proposed by the Obama administration. This revision seeks to better define bodies of water such as tributaries, flowing streams and ditches in hopes of improving communication between farmers and federal agencies. EPA is accepting public comments on the new rule until April 15.

Just as farming is changing, so are the food products coming to our shelves. At the NASDA meeting we listened to a panel discussion about cell-based meat development. Cells taken from animals and grown in laboratory environments could be sold to the public. Regulation and labeling are hot topics here, and it will be interesting to see how this plays out.

As crop prices and farm incomes are down, international trade is more important than ever. Food and agricultural exports make up 25 to 30 percent of the market for our crops. The United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement, proposed as an update for the 20-year-old NAFTA agreement, can eliminate trade barriers and maintain our relationship with our North American neighbors. This is crucial for our farmers, not only in America, but also here in South Carolina.

While listening to the speakers present on trade, one message that stuck with me was the need for diversification of trade and taking advantage of emerging markets. Advocacy and representation for South Carolina is important. Finding new international markets will positively impact the goal of increasing our agribusiness industry.

While in Washington,
Congressman Clyburn
and I discussed several subjects, including financial help for losses from the two hurricanes in 2018.
Our farmers lost more than $200 million in crop value, and we talked about the prospects of some help for our farmers to come soon. We'll keep you posted on that.

As farming and markets continues to change, I am confident that South Carolina farmers will continue to adapt and see the benefits of changes to regulations. With these changes, there are always challenges, but I also see plenty of opportunities for our state.

COMMISSIONER'S CUP BBQ COOK-OFF THIS WEEKEND

One of SCDA's most popular events is the annual Commissioner's Cup BBQ Cook-off, now in its eighth year. It will be held March 22 and 23 at the State Farmers Market in West Columbia.

The 25 cook teams are coming from all over South Carolina, plus two teams from North Carolina. In addition, eight Kid's 'Que cook teams are signed up, according to Kate Daly, SCDA's event planner.

Last year's winner, Tail-Gater Hater, the grand champion winner of 2018, will be back to defend its title. "Attendees of the event, which number around 2,500, get a voting token at the entrance tent. Later in the day they can cast their vote for People's Choice, their favorite BBQ cook team," Daly explained.

The SC State Championship BBQ
Cook-off is sanctioned
by the Southern BBQ Network. To honor the great barbecue in this state, the Commissioner's Cup will require representation of common Carolina barbecue.

South Carolina is one of the only places in the nation that serves all four of the basic types of barbecue, according to Discover SC. The types are defined by the sauce used and the method of preparation. These sauces are either basted on during cooking, added after cooking, or both.

They are defined as follows:

COASTAL OR LOWCOUNTRY STYLE

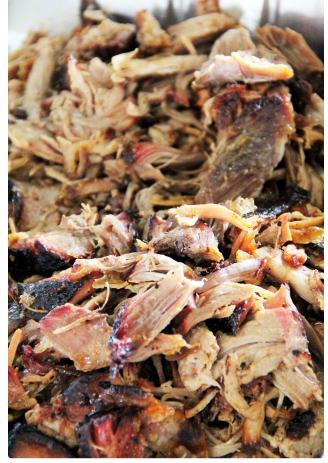

Along the coast is barbecue with a spicy vinegarand-pepper sauce. Either rough chopped or finely chopped, it is moist, tender and smoky. The sauce is thin and tangy with a good mixture of salt, pepper and pepper flakes. The "vinegar bite" should be tempered, not harsh.

MIDLANDS STYLE

Mustard style is a distinctive sauce, unique to South Carolina. It can be pulled, rough chopped, finely chopped, or sliced. It is tender, moist and smoky. The sauce might be sweetened with sugar, brown sugar, molasses or honey, with a nice mix of salt and pepper. Mustard should not be the predominant flavor. Some pit masters will add a touch of heat.

PEE DEE STYLE

The Pee Dee is known for a light tomato sauce, basically vinegar and pepper with ketchup or tomato added. It is usually rough chopped, finely chopped or pulled. It is tender, moist, and smoky. This style sauce can be a little thicker than a vinegar pepper sauce. It is generally sweetened a little with sugar or honey, although proper additions of tomato can sweeten the sauce naturally.

used for judging will be supplied by SCDA and must be cooked on site.

• Pork Ribs offers cash awards of $1,900. First place money is $1,000. Second place is $600, and third place is $300.

Teams will furnish their own ribs in an unopened package.

Only teams who compete in ribs and butts are eligible for grand champion and reserve champion awards. Grand Champion wins an additional $600, and Reserve Champion wins an additional $300.

• Kids' Que. Children of participating cook teams are invited to compete in the third annual kids' cook-off. The children will grill hamburgers or pork tenderloins, depending on their age. SCDA will supply the meat.

The contest is open to children ages 5-10 for the Junior Division and 11-16 for the Senior Division. A parent or guardian must be present at all times. Children should take the lead on how they want to cook and prepare their meat.

Each senior contestant will receive two pork tenderloins. The meat must be cooked to an internal temperature of no less than 145°.

Each contestant in the junior division will receive two pounds of ground beef. The meat must be cooked to an internal temperature of 130°.

The Kids' Que division wins trophies and cash awards: Senior Grand Champion $60; Junior Grand Champion $60; Senior Reserve Champion $40.

• People's Choice wins a trophy. The winner is determined by votes from the public.

All BBQ meat will be served by the cook teams as samples starting at 11 a.m. on Saturday.

UPSTATE STYLE

In the Western and northwestern part of the state, heavy tomato sauce is usually the choice. A common style for the rest of the country, it can be pulled, chopped or sliced and carries sweet spicy tones. This style can be either thin or thick, sweetened with molasses, sugar, or brown sugar. Pit masters may add a variety of seasonings for a complex note. It is the most common style in competition barbecue today.

The cook-off will have the following categories:

• Boston Butts offers cash awards of $1,900. First place money is $1,000. Second place is $600, and third place is $300.

Each cook team will be given four to eight butts on Friday after the cook team meeting. All meat

SOUTHERN HERITAGE CROPS WORKSHOP

The Clemson Cooperative Extension Service's New and Beginning Farmer Program will host a workshop, "Securing a Niche with Southern Heritage Crops," from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Monday, March 25 at the State Farmers Market in West Columbia.

Southern Heritage Crops were once grown in the region, contributing to the culinary heritage and culture. These crops fell out of favor as new, higher yielding crops were developed to be better adapted to longer supply chain food systems.

Dave Lamie, director of SC New and Beginning Farmer program, said many of these traditional crops have admirable qualities worthy of resurrection. The Slow Food Movement's Ark of Taste is likely the most visible effort to identify and restore these products.

"We invite everyone to join us and learn all about Southern Heritage Crops and how these niche products can fit into production and marketing plans," Lamie said. "We have a program that includes individuals who have successfully ventured into the world of Southern Heritage Crops and will share their experiences. We also will have researchers who will discuss options for these largely untapped markets."

Speakers include Southern Heritage Crops specialists: David Shields; Stephen Kresovich, Robert and Lois Coker Trustees Endowed Chair of Genetics and director of the Clemson Institute of Translational Genomics; Nathan Smith, a Clemson Extension economist at the Sandhill Research and Education Center; and Brian Ward, a Clemson research scientist at the Coastal Research and Education Center who is a national expert for reviving landrace and heirloom crops.

A discussion will follow on how heritage crops can make a difference in farming operations. The workshop is open to the public.

Cost is $30 and includes lunch, as well as a panel discussion to connect producers, researchers, chefs and consumers. Registration deadline is March 21.
